Alex Hassid represents clients in a variety of complex civil cases before federal and state courts. His practice, which covers all phases of litigation from inception through appeal, spans a wide array of subject areas including antitrust matters, government contracts, and general business litigation. Alex also is active in representing pro bono clients in the community.

In recent years, Alex has represented major government contractors in large-scale federal court litigation and arbitration before the American Arbitration Association; prepared several briefs to federal appellate courts, including the U.S. Courts of Appeals for the First, Second, Fourth, and Tenth Circuits; and conducted and won a trial on behalf of a pro bono client in Maryland State court.

Previously, Alex served as an intern for the Honorable Eric T. Washington in the District of Columbia Court of Appeals.
