Ashley has a background in complex civil litigation that has served as a strong foundation to her family law practice that she began over 11 years ago. She has extensive experience handling all aspects of family law matters from inception through trial and post-judgment matters, including litigating high-conflict custody, complicated property, and support issues in court, and utilizing mediation and other alternative forms of dispute resolution to reach settlements that are in her clients' best interests, as well as drafting prenuptial and postnuptial agreements.

Ashley is committed to providing her clients with exceptional legal representation through strong legal advocacy, while also understanding the importance and complexity of the practical aspects attendant to all family law cases that should be considered in the ultimate resolution.

During law school, she served as the technical editor of the Loyola Law Review of Los Angeles, received the First Honors Award in Trial Advocacy, and was selected as writing one of the top ten briefs in the Scott Moot Court Competition.
