Christopher W. Caudill focuses his practice on complex commercial litigation and construction litigation involving breach of contract, breach of fiduciary duties, fraud, and trade secret misappropriation, among other things. He has successfully represented both plaintiffs and defendants in state courts, federal courts, and arbitration.

Chris has experience representing general contractors and subcontractors across Texas in construction defect and breach of contract actions. He also counsels a variety of businesses in the manufacturing industry including those operating in specialized fields of sublimation, steel assembly and coating, and industrial hydraulic lift suspensions. He regularly advises both homeowners and contractors on available actions and defenses related to the Texas Residential Construction Liability Act ("RCLA").

Outside The Firm

Chris enjoys traveling the world with his wife and walking his large Hungarian sheepdog around Houston. He is an avid golfer and an annual participant in the Houston Livestock Show & Rodeo BBQ Cook-Off competition.
