Ryan represents oil and gas companies, private equity and hedge funds, and other financial institutions in mergers and acquisitions, project finance and development, and other transactions related to the energy industry. A recognized practitioner in Texas and Pennsylvania, as well as across the United States, Ryan also frequently lectures on topics related to oil and gas and has served as an adjunct professor teaching Energy Law at Duquesne University's School of Law.

Ryan's experience includes:

- Joint ventures and other strategic combinations regarding the development of oil and gas assets, primarily in domestic shale areas
- Acquisitions and divestitures of oil and gas assets, midstream and master limited partnership assets, and oilfield service businesses
- Financing transactions, including volumetric production payments, net profits interests and mineral royalty funds

He has served as in-house counsel to two publicly traded natural gas companies (including the first-ever exploration and production master limited partnership), where he advised on a range of commercial and operations issues, including oil and gas marketing arrangements, land acquisition and development, employment matters, and litigation. Ryan also serves as outside general counsel to several exploration and production and midstream companies, advising them on all aspects of their operations.

During law school, Ryan was a Member of the University of Pittsburgh School of Law's Journal of Law and Commerce.
