Terry Henry concentrates his practice on product liability and general commercial litigation. His practice is focused on the defense of companies that design and manufacture medical devices, pharmaceuticals, chemicals, and home safety products.

- Terry works with a variety of product manufacturers when there are questions about their products.
- Terry serves as national coordinating and trial counsel for drug and medical device companies, coordinating the defense of litigation that challenges the safety and effectiveness of products across multiple jurisdictions.
- He also consults with his clients on product recalls, compliance with industry standards, limiting or controlling risk, and product manufacturing and distribution in highly regulated industries.
- Terry assists clients in developing product literature, review of quality processes, product failure investigations, and crisis management.
- He regularly leads litigation in commercial cases, representing life sciences companies in contract, labeling, and other proceedings in which an understanding of the life sciences industry is essential.

Terry is a noted writer and speaker. Some of his recent publications and presentations include:

- “Opioid Enforcement and Litigation Landscape” speaker, ACI Drug and Medical Device Conference, New York, NY, November 30, 2018.
